ReedPOP's Keystone Comic Con is this weekend.

MOLLY GIVEN

This weekend marks a special occasion for the City of Brotherly Love and all pop culture lovers. Keystone Comic Con kicks off this Friday, Aug. 23, and will feature three days full of star-studded panels, immersive experiences and unique opportunities that will create life-long-lasting memories.

This massive event is made possible by ReedPOP, a sector of Reed Exhibitions. "Reed Exhibitions is one of the largest event companies in the world," says MK Goodwin, event director at ReedPOP. "About 15 years ago the team launched New York Comic Con. We quickly saw that there was a massive demand for these kinds of pop culture events for anyone who is passionate about anything to do with comics, arts, games, TV, movies. I mean, you name it and we have it at one of our Comic Cons. Seeing the demand and wanting to create more shows motivated us to create our own group, ReedPOP, so we're the quirky offshoot of Reed Exhibitions. We went from having one or two shows a year to having over 40 across the globe, and the rest is kind of history."

Keystone Comic Con will be chock-full of exciting experiences and of course, many special guests, including Spider-Man himself, Tom Holland.

"There's a lot going on, so pop culture fans can find something that they love here no matter what. But the big stand-out this year is the fact that Tom Holland is coming to the show. We're so excited that he's onboard," says Goodwin. "'Spider-Man: Far From Home' was such a fantastic movie, and I know that there were a lot of people who were emotionally involved with 'Avengers: Endgame' and his story and his character being a huge part in that. It's something that we're really excited to bring to the show for everyone."

But Spidey isn't the only draw to this massive event.

"Marvel Cinematic Universe obviously is a huge part of the show this year. 'Harry Potter.' as well. continues to be a fan favorite. We have three of the Weasley kids coming so we're really excited about that," adds Goodwin. "We also have some of the stars of 'Star Trek' coming and the 'Overwatch' cast — it's all about these big fandoms this year."

One fun aspect Comic Con events have in their repertoire are the interactive experiences guests can delve into. These immersive experiences add a little zest to an already flavorful agenda and really set these kinds of events apart.

"We have the 'Star Wars' fan experience where we'll have replica movie props and costumed characters so people can immerse themselves into 'Star Wars' all weekend long. I think that kind of stuff is really special and adds to the experience," says Goodwin. "There are fans of all ages out there and we try to cater to every age group, It's also a really great place for families — there's something for everyone and a lot to do. Plus, some of our tickets offer a great way to customize your experience. We offer a lot of great packages that give people extra access or prime seating for a specific panel. All of the details are available on our website."

With the event spanning three days there is a lot to cover. Some days may be more ideal than others if you're hyper-focused on a specific panel or event. "It really depends on the fan and what they are interested in," says Goodwin. "If someone is really hardcore MCU, we are going to recommend you come on Sunday because that's the day Tom Holland is going to be there. But there's something exciting going on every day. There's enough to fill three full days, which is why we think the three-day ticket is a really great value for that kind of stuff."

What stands out about this event is not all of the colorful events, celebrity sightings or even the unique experience (although they do help). It's really about the community atmosphere and the bonds that are made when attending and meeting like-minded individuals.

"It just has the ReedPOP touch. We are fans of this stuff ourselves and we love it. We put our heart and soul into it and I think that it shows. We just love interacting with the fans and we offer a ton of stuff to do in addition to seeing guests at the show. I think fans can see that," says Goodwin. "A lot of the show is not only just seeing things that you love, but finding other people who love the same thing and the magic that happens when those introductions are made and those friendships are formed. Some of these events are so special to people .We even had someone get married last year at the Keystone Comic Con. This is how passionate this community is and this is how strong these connections are that are made. That's what makes all the late nights and long hours we spend working on this worth it, and we are just so excited to celebrate it with everybody."

Proceeds from every kid's ticket sold this year will benefit PAL, and kids under the age of 12 will be admitted for free on Sunday.

Everything you need to know about MilkBoy's new drag brunch

The monthly "Milk & Cookies" show debuts this Sunday.

MADELINE PRESLAND

Sunday brunch: the ultimate leisure for city dwellers fueled by mimosas and ordering too much food. Philly restaurants brunch seriously with hundreds of options ranging from themed menus to buffets. If you want to take your brunching to the next level, combine your favorite brunch foods with dazzling performances at MilkBoy this weekend.

Known for their cool bar and restaurant space behind a garage door and an upstairs concert venue, MilkBoy is one of the most unique destinations in Philly. They manage to incorporate a little bit of everything, from early weekday breakfast to a full recording studio in Callowhill. Their Center City location at 1100 Chestnut St. location is home to some of the best late-night shows and parties. A new drag brunch show will help bring the party downstairs on the last Sunday of each month starting Aug. 25, and it's definitely not your typical drag brunch.

"The idea of 'Milk & Cookies' came alive during Philly Beer Week earlier this year, when we hosted the only LGBTQ-related event," co-founder Jamie Lokoff said in a press release. "We're proud to contribute to Philly's vibrant LGBTQ scene."

Hosted by drag and burlesque artist Icon Ebony-Fierce, you can expect a range of performers each month, including comedy, burlesque and dance party breaks upstairs to keep the energy going. To kick things off this Sunday, mix equal parts spook and spice to help you get ready for Fall. Performers include the witchy Sa'Mantha SayTen, heavy metal drag artist Lorna Doom and a burlesque performance by Sinnamon. DJ DELISH is spinning brunch-worthy tunes, and comedian Nicole Phoenix will perform standup.

It wouldn't be brunch without food and drink specials. One menu item exclusive to "Milk & Cookies" is a Pride Salmon Deluxe, a lox bagel sandwich with scallion cream cheese and all the other accoutrements served on a rainbow bagel. Classic brunch dishes include buttermilk pancakes and a breakfast burger dubbed the "Hangover Burger" ($15), with pickled pepper, chili mayo and bacon. Don't miss the chance to try their drag brunch-exclusive CBD Pride punch ($12) made with vodka, CBD oil and fresh juice. Or, try local beers on tap like Evil Genius's Tap Takeover for $4.

Entrance to the drag brunch series is free. Food and beverages are pay as you go. Brunch goes from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m., with two shows at 12:30 p.m. and 2:30 p.m. Visit milkboyphilly.com for more information.

Where to celebrate National Dog Day in Philly

National Dog Day is this Monday.

MADELINE PRESLAND

Dog ownership isn't just a lifestyle for Philadelphians. It's an identity.

Dog parents can spoil their pet even more on National Dog Day on Monday at two boutique hotels in Philly. Doting thirty-something dog owners are more likely to splurge on pampering their pets over themselves, and 35 percent of pet owners are millennials. Between these statistics on millennial pet owners and Philly's abundance of advocacy groups like the Philadelphia No Kill Coalition, dogs are popular companions in Philly. Celebrate your pup's unconditional love by treating them to a pamper session and extra treats, or bring friends to check out adoptable dogs on Monday, Aug. 26. Here's where you should celebrate National Dog Day in Philly.

Meet some "ambassadogs" and more at The Rittenhouse

Morris Animal Refuge will be at The Rittenhouse (210 W. Rittenhouse Sq.) to introduce adoptable pups to potential new owners in a beautiful setting. Dogs will be onsite from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Afterward, stop by The Library Bar

Sidewalk festival at Hotel Monaco

Hotel Monaco (433 Chestnut St.) is going all out for the dog owners looking to give their fido a true day of glamor during Dog Days of Summer from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. Start with bath to help your dog cool down from the summer heat, and then they can get ready to pose. A caricature artist can draw a beautiful portrait of your furry friend, or they can get in the photo booth to find their best angle. Follow up with a dog-themed happy hour on Red Owl Tavern's patio to snack on hush puppies and or sip on a Greyhound cocktail (vodka or gin with grapefruit juice) for $6 each. Volunteers from Lulu's Rescue will also be in attendance accompanied by adoptable pups looking for a loving home. Proceeds from the event will be donated to the shelter.

'The Police was never an average rock band'

ANDY SUMMERS

Guitarist of the iconic British band reveales the story of Call the Police, a tribute band he formed in 2017 with two Brazilian musicians.

JOSEE BARRETO

How was Call the Police born?
It was born organically. Before we did it, I had been playing in Brazil for several years. I met many people, including Rodrigo Santos (bass guitar and vocals), from the band Barão Vermelho. He is an incredible guy with whom we even play in Brazilian TV shows, in which we mixed his songs with those of The Police. Then João Barone (drums) appeared. We thought it was a good idea to do a tour only with The Police themes. A few shows were enough to realize that people loved this project.

Did you again feel the love for that stage of your career?
I have always been happy to play The Police songs. And it's even cooler because my teammates come from very influential bands. Barone is a drummer for Os Paralamas do Sucesso. I do many solo performances, they have fun, I have fun. I am happy.

Many think The Police songs are very difficult to play.
The Police was never an average rock band. It was the union of three sophisticated musicians decided to rock, but we were more than that. We started in the London punk scene in 1977, and at that time everyone sounded the same. We did not want to be like someone else. What people hear in The Police is the sound of three musicians reacting to that. We worked like a well-oiled machine. Maybe that's why it's so difficult to sing and play bass like Sting, play drums like Stewart (Copeland) or do my stuff on guitar.

Do you think that purpose of not sounding like someone else is something that has been lost in modern music?
Possibly. First of all, today there is too much music ... It's amazing. I grew up in a totally different era, there was no one to teach you to play and you had to manage. Now it is an industry. You go to YouTube and everything is there. I am very proud of what I learned at the time I did it. Today I find it very difficult to listen to a lot of pop music. Most of it is very bad. But occasionally something interesting comes out. It is a mass production.

What was the highest point you have reached with The Police?
I think the reunion we had in 2007. We were much bigger than we were in the '80s. We played only at stadiums and that was amazing.

What to expect from your shows with Call the Police?
An exciting night with three very sexy boys in good shape — musical shape [laughs].

Why are we fed up with influencers?

At least in the fashion industry, it seems that they are not profitable. But were they ever? Metro investigates.

LUZ LANCHEROS

Millions of followers could not help Arii to sell 252 T-shirts. GETTY IMAGES

She has more than 2 million followers, but was not even able to sell 36 T-shirts (she clarified that there were actually a lot more… 252). Arii (Arianna Renee), an 18 year old, became famous for showing online how influencers are not that great or unable to boost sales that much: The company she was promoting demanded a minimum of likes that she just could not meet. And her case is not the only one.

In fact, for the first quarter of this year, the proportion between likes and followers of specialized fashion profiles declined by almost two points compared to last year, according to the Influencer Marketing Benchmark Report 2019, from the consultant InfluencerDB. If we talk about interaction and engagement, the like-follower ratio (the interaction of influencers with followers) has dropped from 5.3 to 3.5 percent since last year. Furthermore, another study done by company Cheq and the University of Baltimore revealed that companies lost approximately $1.4 billion when hiring influencers. Ten thousand of them were investigated: Twenty-five percent of their followers were bought or manipulated their engagement even with sponsored posts.

Now, it is known that there are companies that openly buy followers. There was even a scandal for one that bought followers for celebrities (Devumi).

Why do we follow them?

"Everything has a saturation point. Facebook has become just contemplative. People hand out likes, but they comment a thousand times less and only share prefabricated memes. Now, brands have a big problem. They have people in front who have too many commitments and interests with the same influencers. It's a bit like the rope at a club: they just let in the ones they know," says Gustavo Prado, coolhunter at Trendo agency. "From Day One it was obvious that influencers had no influence. We can like them, but they don't determine behavior. In the immediate future, the whole marketing issue has to be redefined, because it is based on totally wrong bases. The 'customer journey' does not interest consumers. People buy occasional things or always buy the same thing; outside of that, there is no way to change people's behavior. If they sell, it's because their origin is on YouTube. They are the only ones that really pull billions of views."

"What is authentic today, won't be tomorrow. Our mind is designed to ignore what we know and pay more attention to what's new. On the other hand, the world of influencers, like everything that has to do with the digital world, is a world in its early childhood, so brands know that they have to do a lot of trial and error if they want results," explains digital marketing expert Ricardo Orrego.

Now, it is also true that people today focus more on experiences, and perhaps a person with a prefabricated life (as has been seen in many cases) is not always ideal. And while there are influencers who propose other types of content with consistency and quality and reach even more massive media such as television and gigantic brands, and there are segments in which they move better (microinfluencers) — how much will they impact in the future?

"Will the game for influence marketing end this year? This is due to the lack of transparency, trust and authenticity, which has only worsened due to the poor selection of influencers. As an agency, we want to evolve to overcome these obstacles and focus on the data. We do not believe that the influence marketing bubble will explode and there are many signs that these actors continue to trust the industry," Leona McCaul explains in a FOUND marketing agency presentation. This is the challenge for influencers, for those who guide their content, and for consumers.

Host Alton Brown gives Metro the scoop on "Good Eats: The Return."

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

When "Good Eats" first premiered in 1999, the show's quirky style and innovative take on food captivated audiences and amassed host Alton Brown a loyal fanbase almost immediately. When the show went off the air in 2012, many thought that it was done for good.

However, Brown was simply waiting for the perfect opportunity to bring the legacy back— and now that time has finally come. Brown sat down with Metro to discuss the return of "Good Eats," dive into why the show is unique and overall give his take on why knowledge gives you power in the kitchen.

Why choose now to bring back "Good Eats: The Return"?

Well, I had always planned on bringing it back, but I was waiting for three things. One, when I stopped making "Good Eats" I realized that media consumption was going to change from being strictly television-based to being internet-based. People were going to be watching on their phones more then they were on televisions, so I kind of wanted to see where that was going. Secondly, I also wanted to see how the internet was going to change in general. There were so many stories I couldn't tell originally because they involved ingredients that people couldn't get. Now, you can get anything– especially with Amazon and services that allow food to be shipped directly. The third thing involved technology. There were a lot of things I wanted to do visually as a filmmaker that I couldn't do before and I knew new elements were coming. So I decided to wait and do other things until I had all of those three things in alignment.

I know you were involved with cinematography before as well, can you tell me a little more about the camera techniques that are involved with the show?

To me, with "Good Eats", we are making half-hour movies about food. It has always been my feeling, especially with the old show that we have to compete with TV commercials if we want you to watch. We have to be very visual and engaging to keep that part of your brain going. Now, it's even more challenging because of all the different technologies that people are watching on and consuming on. So what we try to do is amp up our game visually by employing a lot of new techniques. We're using some devices that we are the first TV show to be using and we've adopted some other technologies to allow cameras to do things they have never done before. We employ a lot of kind of weird old-school analog techniques— we do a lot with mirrors and magnifying glasses. Some folks deal with computer-generated animation, and we are doing it the old-school way, treating it as theater almost. It's a really different-looking show, our motto on "Good Eats" has been that every single day we would do a shot that we've never been done before. Now that's pretty much with every shot— we've never done most of them before. A lot has changed in the film world that allows us to do these cool things. Hopefully, it's compelling for viewers.

Why do you think "Good Eats" has amassed such a loyal fan base, what sets the show apart?

We've always said from the beginning that knowing how and understanding are powerful things. It's not enough to know just how to put a recipe together, it really helps to understand why that recipe works and why these things happen. I think people respond to that kind of knowledge and that kind of know-how. It's powerful, because at the end of the day if you don't know, all you have is a recipe and you're not actually becoming a better cook. So we always try to approach our shows as empowering people to become better. We also always frame the episodes as stories—we're storytellers. So we follow a scripted, narrative form to make people appreciate things in a different way. We're doing a lot this season that involves a lot of historical [criteria]. For instance, why do people eat Matzah at Hannukah? There are reasons for all of that. So we dive into the history of that one particular dish even if you don't cook it, so then you have a different appreciation for it. It's easier to teach people if they are entertained, and if they are laughing that's even better. Comedy is a huge part of what we do because I think it engages the human brain at a different level.

Knowledge is power

ANDERS KRUSBERG/ FOOD NETWORK

How do you continually find different ingredients and dishes that are featured in each episode?

Oh my gosh, there's so many— there's a lot of food. Five or six years ago I couldn't feature certain ingredients or dishes because people wouldn't want to know what it is, now with social media even if you haven't had something before you probably know what it is. That changes the way we feature the dishes because so many things are familiar now.

What would you tell die-hard fans to expect from the re-boot?

All of the original DNA is there, all of the cheap sock puppets and characters that people love from the show, with the exception of one that I couldn't get on our schedule— but mainly they're all back. So for "Good Eats" fans, every one of these shows is a love letter to them. I don't think we've left anything out. But then I also realize that there will be some people watching who weren't even born when "Good Eats" was on, so we tried not to make it where someone who has never watched before would never get it. But there are a lot of inside jokes, a lot of returning characters and the DNA is completely intact.

On a personal level, how does it feel to bring "Good Eats" back?

I feel dangerously honored— I'm honored to have created something that is of value to people. I do however despise nostalgia, I'm not a sentimental person so my biggest thing is that I've got to earn the viewers all over again. I can't just say let me into your home because you loved me twenty years ago. This is the best work I've ever done, and it's the work I've been waiting to do, but I'm not riding in on a white stallion to soak up all of the love and then be on my way. It's starting all over again. That makes it extremely stressful, I question everything because if you don't like it, it's my fault. I have to earn that all over again, so it's a dangerous thing because it's really easy to fall into thinking the show is beloved—If you do that, you get lazy.

Running life's marathons

Writer-director Paul Downs Colaizzo talks debut film, "Brittany Runs a Marathon."

MOLLY GIVEN

Life can sometimes feel like a marathon with a lot of work, focus and training to achieve a goal, whatever that goal may be. In writer-director Paul Down Colaizzo's debut film "Brittany Runs a Marathon," that idea is exemplified in more ways than one.

Colaizzo's breakout film follows Brittany, a twenty-something New Yorker who spends more time and money on booze and fast food then on her own personal well-being and health. When Brittany realizes her health is in a downward spiral (thanks to a doctor quite literally telling her she's obese), Brittany decides to get healthy. At first the goal for the virgin exerciser is just running a block, but as time goes on those blocks turn into miles and those miles turn into training for a marathon.

For Colaizzo, this movie hits a personal note: Brittany is based on one of his best friends and her own journey. "I was inspired to tell this complicated story about a woman who's an archetype in comedies that we've typically looked at as just the butt of a joke. I wanted to dimensionalize her to be the hero. She's a character that has so many layers that are often unexplored. I wanted her journey to feel funny and fun, but also real, challenging, emotional and cathartic for anybody who watched it. So the idea was to take this archetype of a character, zoom in on her and demand that she be a human in front of us and see what happens."

"Brittany Runs a Marathon" hits theaters this weekend. AMAZON STUDIOS

The demand was met by Jillian Bell, who stars as Brittany. Bell's comedic chops have been showcased by her roles in other projects such as "Workaholics" and "22 Jump Street," but the role of Brittany called for a more vulnerable outlook, which Bell and Colaizzo knocked out of the park.

"It was clear that [Jillian] wanted to protect the character in the same way I did. She wanted to make sure we were telling a fun, funny and engaging story, but also that we were never going to laugh at Brittany in a way that was disrespectful."

is compelling, but also not easy. Like any life lesson or transitional period, there are ups and downs. "I think a lot of the time when we're doing work on ourselves. we're convinced it's the right work on ourselves, and whatever we're focused on is the core of our problems. In reality, our core issue is most likely much deeper and more invisible to us than we know," says Colaizzo. "So I wanted to show that Brittany was starting to make healthier choices in her life, but was also getting sidetracked by the validation she was getting from making those choices instead of the actual vulnerability work that we all struggle with."

Brittany's struggles include a romantic tug-of-war with an immature yet charming "co-worker" she meets through a house-sitting service (Jern), an unhealthy friendship with her social media-obsessed roommate (Gretchen) and a tumultuous relationship with her uptight neighbor and forced running-buddy (Catherine). While Brittany plays emotional yo-yo with all of these characters while on her journey, she also discovers that everyone is dealing with their own marathon-sized problems — which is what Colaizzo hopes audiences themselves take away from the film.

"The idea is that Brittany is everybody and Brittany's journey is universal, which is why all of the other characters are running their own metaphorical marathon at the same time. The way that marathons are accomplished comes from Catherine's line in the film, which is to set little goals," says Colaizzo. "I'm hoping that, along with being entertained and having laughed, that people also leave the theater applying Brittany's story to their own. It's the idea that change is possible and even if we doubt ourselves, there's something inside of you that's nagging you to see how far you can go with something just by starting with a little goal. If we're able to change lives while also entertaining people with this film, then we've done our jobs."

"Brittany Runs a Marathon" hits theaters Aug. 23.

Philadelphia has its first woman police commissioner

Christine Coulter was named acting commissioner after Richard Ross resigned abruptly on Tuesday.

Christine M. Coulter has been named acting police commissioner of the Philadelphia Police Department while the city seeks a replacement for Richard Ross, who resigned abruptly on Tuesday.

Coulter joined Mayor Jim Kenney at a press conference Wednesday for media questions surrounding Ross' resignation over mishandled sexual harassment and discrimination allegations within the department.

"I have always been honored, as a woman and a police officer, to serve this city," Coulter said, when asked about being the first woman in the role. "I would love to continue serving the city. It is all I can tell you right now."

When asked why he chose Coulter for the acting position, Kenney said in a statement: "Deputy Coulter is an experienced police commander with nearly 30 years of law enforcement service. She has diverse experience in patrol operations, narcotics intelligence and investigations. I have full faith in her ability to lead the Department during this time of transition."

Coulter is a three-star deputy and most recently served as a deputy commissioner of Organizational Services, a position she accepted in 2014.

During Wednesday's press conference, Coulter said her No. 1 priority will be combating violence in Philly and working on building relationships with the community. "I will take that hard look, make sure that the right folks are in the right place and that we're structurally organized, to be the most effective department that we can be," she said

Although the mayor can choose someone else for the open police commissioner position, the Philadelphia Inquirer reported that Coulter's promotion is historic: The only other woman who came close to the role was Patricia Giorgio-Fox, who in 2002 became the first woman to be named deputy commissioner.

Kenney said Wednesday that a wide net will be cast in the search for a new police commissioner. "We're looking broadly, local and national, internal and external," he said.

He added, "We're seeking a commissioner who can garner the respect of the rank and file and with the community, just as Richard Ross did. Someone who is committed to building a stronger department, bolstering morale, and addressing workplace challenges."

When asked if she would apply for the open role, Coulter declined to comment.

Ross' resignation follows what Kenney initially described as "new allegations of sexual harassment as well as gender and racial discrimination among the rank and file." He clarified that "those allegations do not accuse Commissioner Ross of harassment."

In a recent lawsuit, Ross is named as a defendant by two woman police officers who claim he ignored sexual harassment and discrimination complaints as their superior. In the lawsuit, one plaintiff claims Ross did nothing in part because she ended a two-year affair with him in 2011.

Ross said Wednesday he has "never sought retribution" and that he left the post by choice.

New Trump rule lets US detain migrant families indefinitely

The Trump administration on Wednesday unveiled a rule that allows officials to detain migrant families indefinitely while judges consider whether to grant them asylum in the United States, eliminating a previous 20-day limit.

The rule, which is certain to draw a legal challenge, would replace a 1997 court settlement that limits the amount of time U.S. immigration authorities can detain migrant children. That agreement is generally interpreted as meaning families must be released within 20 days.

It was the administration's third major regulation restricting immigration in little more than a month, all during an unsettled period when senior immigration officials hold "acting" titles lacking U.S. Senate confirmation.

Trump has made cracking down on legal and illegal immigration a hallmark of his presidency after campaigning in 2016 on a promise, so far unfulfilled, that Mexico would pay for a border wall to keep migrants from entering the United States.

Immigration officials have struggled to handle a surge of families fleeing violence and poverty in Central America. Department of Homeland Security officials say they have "caught" 390,000 family units since last October.

Department of Homeland Security officials say they have "caught" 390,000 family units since last October.

On July 15 the administration unveiled a rule to bar almost all immigrants from applying for asylum at the southern border, and on Aug. 12 it announced regulation allowing visas and permanent residency only for those who make enough money.

Legal challenges have held up many of Trump's initiatives, but immigration advocates say he has managed to build an "invisible wall" through executive actions bypassing Congress.

The administration framed the policy as a humane approach to a crisis in which a record number of mostly Central Americans have sought asylum in the U.S.

"To protect these children from abuse, and stop this illegal flow, we must close these loopholes. This is an urgent humanitarian necessity," Trump said in a statement.

Critics counter that Trump and Stephen Miller, his aide on immigration, are using a series of heartless policies to animate political supporters and discourage migrants from fleeing their impoverished and violence-ridden homelands.

"The cruelty of the Trump administration knows no bounds. Make no mistake: This new rule is about letting President Trump and Stephen Miller keep children in awful conditions for longer periods of time and continue the administration's horrid treatment of innocent migrant families," Senate Democratic leader Chuck Schumer said in a statement. BRIEF

Trump says he is seriously looking at ending birthright citizenship

U.S. President Donald Trump said on Wednesday that his administration was seriously looking at ending the right of citizenship for U.S.-born children of noncitizens and people who immigrated to the United States illegally.

"We're looking at that very seriously, birthright citizenship, where you have a baby on our land, you walk over the border, have a baby — congratulations, the baby is now a U.S. citizen. It's frankly ridiculous," Trump told reporters outside the White House.

Trump has made cracking down on immigration a central plank of his presidency and re-election campaign, but many of the administration's sweeping rule changes and executive orders have been stymied by the courts.

The Republican president had told Axios news in October that he would end "birthright citizenship" through executive order. Experts have said such a move would run afoul of the U.S. Constitution.

The Constitution's 14th Amendment, passed after the Civil War to ensure that black Americans had full citizenship rights, granted citizenship to "all persons born or naturalized in the United States."

Brazil's Bolsonaro says NGOs may be setting fire to Amazon forest

Right-wing president gave no evidence as record blazes rage.

NASA FIRE INFORMATION FOR RESOURCE MANAGEMENT SYSTEM

Brazil's right-wing President Jair Bolsonaro on Wednesday accused non-governmental organizations of setting wildfires in the Amazon rainforest to damage his government's image after he cut their funding.

Bolsonaro, who has shocked environmentalists with plans to open the Amazon to business interests, said NGOs could be behind the record number of wildfires this year, although he presented no evidence to back up his claim.

Bolsonaro said "everything indicates" that NGOs are going to the Amazon to "set fire" to the forest. When asked if he had evidence to back up his claims, he said he had "no written plan," adding "that's not how it's done."

Bolsonaro said the slashing of NGO funding by his government could be a motive for them burning down the forest as they seek to bring his government into disrepute.

BRIEF

Cuba tourism plunges 24% under tightened US ban

Tourist arrivals to Cuba plunged 23.6 percent on the year in July, official data showed on Wednesday, confirming the blow dealt to the sector by the Trump administration's tightening of U.S. restrictions on travel to the Caribbean island.

Data from the Statistics Office had already shown a 20 percent drop in arrivals in June, after Washington that same month banned cruises to Cuba and made it harder for U.S. citizens to get an exemption from the ban on travel there.

The sustained decline reverses a boom in arrivals and therefore the broader tourism industry in recent years following the U.S.-Cuban detente under former U.S. President Barack Obama that President Donald Trump is now unraveling.

The Trump administration has targeted two of the few bright spots in Cuba's otherwise beleaguered economy, tourism and foreign investment, as part of its campaign to pressure the Communist government to reform and drop support for embattled leftist Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro.

Analysts say Trump appears to also be eyeing the 2020 presidential elections, with the swing state of Florida home to many Cuban-Americans who welcome the harder line on Havana and his base applauding it as part of his broader attack on socialism.

The administration's measures are hurting an economy already battling a cash crunch in the wake of a steep decline in aid from leftist ally Venezuela and a drop in exports.

The Cuban government last month revised sharply downwards its estimate for full-year visitors arrivals to 4.3 million from an original goal of more than 5 million. That will spell a 8.5 percent drop from the 4.7 million reported last year. REUTERS

"Crime exists," he said during a Facebook Live broadcast. "These people are missing the money."

Bolsonaro's latest comments enraged environmentalists, who are increasingly concerned by his administration's attitudes toward the world's largest rainforest, a vital bulwark against climate change. Brazil is home to more than half of the Amazon.

"This is a sick statement, a pitiful statement," said Marcio Astrini, Greenpeace Brazil's public policy coordinator. "Increased deforestation and burning are the result of his anti-environmental policy."

Bolsonaro, a longtime skeptic of environmental concerns, wants to open the Amazon to more agriculture and mining, and has told other countries worried about rising deforestation since he took office to mind their own business.

Congressman Nilto Tatto, leader of the lower house environment caucus, said Bolsonaro's "stunning" attack on the NGOs was a smoke screen to hide his dismantling of Brazil's environmental protections built up over 30 years.

Bolsonaro on Wednesday said the administration is working to control fires currently raging in the Amazon rainforest, which have reached a record number this year. Brazil's space research center, INPE, has detected 72,843 fires so far in 2019. REUTERS

Travers breakdown

MetroBet takes a glance at four horses that should shine this Saturday afternoon at Saratoga.

No. 2 CODE OF HONOR was last seen dominating his competition in the one-mile Dwyer Stakes at Belmont Park on July 6. The Travers has been the goal for CODE OF HONOR since the Triple Crown ended and he's been breezing steadily at Saratoga (where he broke his maiden as a juvenile last year) for trainer Shug McGaughey since winning the Dwyer.

GETTY IMAGES

No. 1 OWENDALE owns some of the best speed figures in the field but is still trying to prove his class. He won the Grade III Lexington Stakes at Keeneland back in April before rallying for third in the Preakness Stakes.

No. 6 TACITUS is a consistent trier but has encountered some hard luck in his last couple of starts. The Tampa Bay Derby and Wood Memorial winner was second with a wide trip in the Belmont Stakes two starts ago before placing in the Jim Dandy Stakes behind No. 12 TAX following a very poor start.

No. 3 HIGHEST HONORS moves up in the event of a scratch. He was last seen winning the Curlin Stakes with a four-wide bid over this course the day before the Jim Dandy. The late-blooming son of Tapit is poised to take another step forward in the Travers. Chad Brown names Luis Saez (who won the 2013 Travers atop Will Take Charge) to ride.

The play: $4 exacta Code of Honor/Owendale, Tacitus, $2 exacta Code of Honor/Highest honors, $2 win Owendale ($12) at NYRABets.com/MetroBet

Ravens at Eagles game pick

Traditionally, the most important game of the preseason for all NFL teams is the third one as teams have enough of a buffer zone time-wise between now and for when the real games go down in early September. Preseason game No. 3 usually gives you a good representation of what you might see during the actual season. That wasn't the case last August, however, as the Birds turned in a hideous performance against the Browns in a 5-0 loss. Doug Pederson gave some of his starters some decent burn in that one, but it wasn't like they all played the whole game. For most, it was one quarter and done. Not for nothing … the Ravens have looked like world-beaters in this pre-season so far as they bashed Jacksonville, 29-0, and doubled up Green Bay, 26-13, last week. Baltimore starting quarterback Lamar Jackson should see a ton of reps in Thursday's game (he needs them), while Carson Wentz will surely sit this one out again in fear of winding up like Nate Sudfeld or Cody Kessler. Despite Wentz being on the bench, the rest of the Eagles' No. 1s will see a good chunk of work – and on paper you've got to like the Birds' No. 1s over the Ravens' No. 1s. You won't get the Eagles as underdogs at home often, so why not?

Big 3, Serena still favorites at US Open

America's Grand Slam tennis tournament gets to its main draw on Monday.

ADAM ZAGORIA
sports@metro.us

The Big Three of Novak Djokovic, Roger Federer, and Rafael Nadal have combined to win the last 11 Grand Slam tennis titles.

On the women's side, nine different women have captured the last 11 majors.

When the 2019 US Open begins Monday in Queens with a full slate of action, the "Big Three" will again be the favorites among the men, while the women's draw is as wide open as ever.

Here's a look at the top contenders.

MEN'S SINGLES

CONTENDERS

NOVAK DJOKOVIC

The world No. 1 is the defending US Open champion and has won four of the last five Grand Slam titles. With his epic five-set win over Roger Federer at Wimbledon, Djokovic now has 16 major titles for his career and is closing in on Federer (20) and Rafael Nadal (18). At 32, it seems nearly inevitable that he will surpass his greatest rivals on the all-time list.

ROGER FEDERER

Federer is now 38 and it's an open question whether he will ever win another Grand Slam title. He lost a heart-wrenching five-hour, five-setter to Djokovic in the Wimbledon final after holding two match points on his serve. In his most recent tournament in Cincinnati, he was bounced in straight sets by Russian Andrey Rublev. Federer won the last of his five straight US Opens (2004-08) more than a decade ago. But you can never count him out. "I played 45 matches this year, so I think I should be fine," said Federer.

RAFAEL NADAL

The world No. 2 is looking for his second Grand Slam title of 2019, having won his 12th French Open earlier this year. He comes into New York with momentum after winning the hardcourt title in Montreal. Nadal's body has more or less held up this season, and he will be looking for his fourth US Open title and 19th career major in Queens.

STEFANOS TSITSIPAS

The 20-year-old "Greek Freak" has the big game to go deep in New York. He's 37-17 in 2019 with two titles, and also beat Federer en route to the Australian Open semifinals.

DANIIL MEDVEDEV

The 23-year-old Russian is the hottest player on the men's tour and is now up to No. 5 in the world. He's 39-16 in 2019 after winning the title in Cincinnati, where he beat Djokovic in the semis, and before that making the final in Montreal, where he lost to Nadal.

WOMEN'S SINGLES

CONTENDERS

SERENA WILLIAMS

Serena still has yet to win a title of any kind since giving birth to her daughter in September 2017. She comes into New York in uncertain health after back spasms forced her to retire from the Toronto final and then withdraw before playing a match in Cincinnati. As usual, history is on the line. Serena is holding at 23 career Grand Slam titles and needs one more to tie Margaret Court atop the all-time list.

NAOMI OSAKA

The defending US Open champ and world No. 1 is also facing health issues. She was forced to retire from her quarterfinal match in Cincinnati after injuring her left knee. "I didn't want to get injured this close to the Open," she told reporters. "And now I'm kind of worried a little bit."

SIMONA HALEP

Halep is one of only two women to win multiple majors since 2017, having captured the 2018 French Open and then beating Williams in this year's Wimbledon final. Still, she has lost in the first round in her last two trips to Flushing Meadows and her best finish in New York came four years ago when she reached the semifinals.

ASH BARTY

The 2019 French Open champion was No. 1 in the world for seven weeks until surrendering the spot to Osaka. She comes into New York having lost in the semis in Cincinnati.

MADISON KEYS

The 24-year-old American is as hot as anyone on the tour and seems poised for a big run in New York. She won the title in Cincinnati – beating four Grand Slam champions along the way – and has performed well at the Open the last two years, making the semis last year and the final in 2017.

COCO GAUFF

The 15-year-old American sensation probably isn't ready to win a Grand Slam title yet, but she'll draw a lot of attention in her second Grand Slam tournament after making a run to the fourth round at Wimbledon.

Eagles preseason still dominated by injuries

The latest on some key contributors on the Eagles' injury list.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

The Philadelphia Eagles are past the halfway point of their preseason slate, entering Week 3 of the exhibition season against the Baltimore Ravens with plenty of work left to do.

Week 1 of the regular season is just three weeks away, but the Eagles have a lot of healing to do before then as a plethora of notable names is on the injury list this summer.

Here is the latest on them before Thursday night's matchup with the Ravens:

Fletcher Cox is one of several Eagles nursing injuries this preseason. GETTY IMAGES

NIGEL BRADHAM

The linebacker is working his way back from a toe injury, participating in seven-on-seven drills this week. However, it is unclear if he'll be back for Week 1. The 29-year-old is coming off one of his more productive professional seasons, putting up 97 combined tackles and two sacks.

BRANDON BROOKS

The veteran guard has yet to be cleared for team drills this summer, but Brooks is still slated to be in the trenches come Week 1. Brooks ruptured his Achilles during the NFC Divisional Round loss to the Saints.

COREY CLEMENT

The reserve running back's knee might be well enough to have him go on Thursday night against the Ravens. It's better late than never as Clement will be battling to get reps alongside Jordan Howard and Miles Sanders.

FLETCHER COX

As one of the anchors of the defensive line, Cox has spent most of the summer healing from a foot injury against the Saints that required surgery. He should be a go for Week 1, but don't expect to see him during the preseason.

RONALD DARBY

All eyes have been on the Eagles cornerback situation this offseason with Darby attempting to make his way back from a torn ACL suffered last season. He began participating in team drills this week, but his Week 1 status is still doubtful.

DALLAS GOEDERT

A calf injury will hold the second-year tight end out of the preseason, but he'll be good to go for Week 1.

LANE JOHNSON

The offensive tackle is also done for the preseason. But, like Goedert, Johnson will be back in the fold for the regular-season opener.

RODNEY MCLEOD

The safety is almost back from a torn ACL that limited his 2018 season to just three games. His original goal was to get back for Thursday night's game vs. Baltimore, but it's still unclear whether he'll go or not.

NATE SUDFELD

Sudfeld's broken wrist, along with Cody Kessler's concussion, prompted the Eagles to sign veteran quarterback Josh McCown. Sudfeld's cast is off, but he's still going to be unavailable for the first few weeks of the season.
